Hypatia

Clifford Bias, the well-known medium, on June 21, 1971 gave the following message which was tape recorded. After a short introduction by Della Frances Winger (on the other side) Hypatia of Alexandria, Egypt comes back to tell her story which happened in 415 A.D.

This is a lady who came over here many, many, many years ago. She was a martyr. She was not a Christian martyr; she was martyred by the Christians. How glorious it is to have the opportunity to introduce someone whom you may have heard or read about, whose name is Hypatia.

"I am Hypatia, daughter of Theorem, the mathematician. My father and I had life was a gift from God; therefore, it was our duty to enjoy it -- whether it was the feel of rich velvet in our fingers, the color of a rose, the odor of sweet flowers, the warm handclasp of a friend, the kiss of a beloved -- soft hair, color, form, sound, odor.

It was taught in our school to enjoy and to find life to be a beautiful experience and those who were the monks felt that all of these things were sinful. They were followers of the new Christian religion and they ran away from their physical bodies which God had given them. They were ashamed of their physical bodies, they were ashamed of their senses and feelings; they tried to hide them, suppress them and they felt great rage for those who enjoyed these things. They seized me and tied me by the hair of my head to a chariot and a school, an academy of philosophy, in Alexandria, in Egypt and out of our school there came truth. We taught the divine principles of the great Pythagorus and divine Plato. From out of the surrounding desert there came to our city a group of Christian monks, led by a fanatic. Our teachings were simple; teaching the great truth of Man's divinity, Man's inherent divinity.

We taught the simple life, but we taught the enjoyment of life. That life was a gift from God; therefore, it was our duty to enjoy it -- whether it was the feel of rich velvet in our fingers, the color of a rose, the odor of sweet flowers, the warm handclasp of a friend, the kiss of a beloved -- soft hair, color, form, sound, odor.

It was taught in our school to enjoy and to find life to be a beautiful experience and those who were the monks felt that all of these things were sinful. They were followers of the new Christian religion and they ran away from their physical bodies which God had given them. They were ashamed of their physical bodies, they were ashamed of their senses and feelings; they tried to hide them, suppress them and they felt great rage for those who enjoyed these things. They seized me and tied me by the hair of my head to a chariot and drove that chariot through the city streets. That is how I came to the spirit world.

One of the great men of all times had said, "Love your enemies," and I have sought to forgive, for he too was seized by those who would accept him not. His body was nailed upon a cross and as he was dying upon that cross, he said, "Father, forgive them." So have I a long time ago asked the great gods, the great elder brothers, and the infinite source of all supply, the infinite, to forgive. But I come back at this beginning of a new age and I say to you, be not ashamed of the house which God has given, which our Mother Earth, Mother Water, has given to you. For out of the earth comes your physical bodies; the mother is the giver of form; the father is the giver of life. You are not to be ashamed. Exalt rather the beauty and the glory of the physical. Run not away from it.

Many of you have in previous incarnations ran away from the physical body. You climbed the mountain of the Lord as you thought, you were entering into monasteries and convents, denying the great natural forces of life. Running away from them, hiding your faces, covering your bodies, hiding and being ashamed, so you have come back.

The Lords of Karma have dropped you right in the middle of things, amidst all the temptations. The message from the Lords of Karma is, 'Don't beashamed, learn to exalt and use and rule those lower vehicles of yours rather than running away from them.' That is the message of Hypatia to you who are students. Run not away from, deny not the physical. Rather exalt in it -- whether it is the taste of sweet wine, whether it is the feeling of rose petals, whether it is the sight of a sunset, whether it is hearing a beautiful piece of music or the lilting sound of a loved one's voice. Enjoy those senses of yours, exercise them, learn to go beyond them a wee bit; thus, expanding those consciousnesses to an extra sensory perception. You will be able to see and hear, to feel, to be close to your own loved ones and those of yours who are the teachers; we come to say live, live, expand your lives and grow. It is good to greet you; I am Hypatia."

Thus, the message first enunciated by the Archean School in Alexandria harmonizes Egyptian and Christian truths as was first understood by King AT and Queen Tasha, the parents of the Apostle Paul, and now becomes the message of the New Age. A message that will be more completely understood through transcendental meditation, giving man the insight to find his self identity through the impersonal Source of Light, bringing understanding and wisdom - creative intelligence.
